

Sunday Lund. Eve 15th

Dear Sir,

I send you the Book with the notes, drawings &c. I confess myself at a loss to know whether all are properly arranged or not & also whether they would better be placed ~~at~~ the foot of the page, or at the end of the vol as it is now. Your own and best best judgment about that, will be better than mine. Pray see when on the last page of the Introduction, the page marked I should be inserted. I think at the close. I have yet the drawings of Coleridge, Colman & Franklin, a murderer to describe, I will bring them with me on Friday or Sat.

Our Parson delivered a very erudite discourse this morning, which you should have heard. Its subject was the distinction between judicial & providential blindness!!

It reminded me very forcibly, of a high soaring Transcendentalist to whom I once heard discourses on Inspiration. You can guess his vein in that matter. "Pray, Mr. Wright, said a poor, matter of fact man, who had listened very patiently for some <sup>times</sup> tell me what Inspiration is, according to your view." Inspiration - replied the unfortunate orator. "Inspiration is - a - development of the radical powers of the universe?

Yours
